

On the track of Bigfoot

Dr Tarona Gail Hawkins continues her series on the supernatural

Tarona's American friend, Joseph M DeAndrade with a drawing of Bigfoot

ONE of my American pen pals is editor of a paranormal magazine and is also the head of an organisation called P.I.O.

They are at present investigating many strange happenings in a region called the Bridgewater Triangle in eastern Massachusetts. The Triangle covers about 200 square miles and includes several towns within its area.

Some people have claimed to have seen very strange creatures here. These include the following.

A huge prehistoric looking bird, a big black dog with red eyes, a big black panther, an enormous long snake as wide as a stove-pipe and a big strong hairy creature between seven to 8ft tall. This creature was reported to have long brown hair all over its body and two reddish orange eyes on its face.

It's been seen standing, walking and running in an upright position. It has been given the name Sasquatch, by the native American Indians who claimed their people have seen it over many centuries.

Its more common name is that of Bigfoot, because of its big feet. Sasquatch or Bigfoot as it is called is the most famous creature in the Bridgewater Triangle mystery.

Different kinds of UFOs have also been sighted within this region over many years. The most dangerous place there is a swamp called the Hockomock swamp. It's where the most strange and mysterious things have occurred, especially at night.

Most of the people interviewed have claimed they've heard of the swamp's bad reputation and that they are terrified to go near it. Not surprising when you learn about the ones who entered Hockomock and have never been seen again.

Some of the people interviewed felt sure that, deep in this swamp, Satanic activity was occurring.

Many claimed they have heard blood curdling screams of pain from the depths of the area, especially at night. The witnesses said the horrendous screams sounded very human to them.

I will let Echo readers have an update if anything else is reported to me. Please write in and tell me if you or someone you know is involved in any paranormal investigations.
